Employment Insurance coverage

1999

The coverage rate (i.e., potential eligibility) for Employment Insurance remained stable in 1999 even though unemployment fell, according to the 1999 Employment Insurance Coverage Survey.

An average of 1.14 million people were unemployed during the weeks when the survey was taken, down 9.6% from 1998. Despite this decline, about half these individuals were potentially eligible for EI, the same rate as in 1998.

For the other half, the most common reason for not being covered by the EI program was the lack of any recent employment. These individuals were not potentially eligible because benefit periods usually last for 12 months. In 1999, an estimated 32% of the unemployed were not potentially eligible for EI for this reason. Other causes for exclusion from the program include lack of insurable employment and quitting jobs without cause.

Women had a lower coverage rate than did men, because of the larger number of women who were labour force entrants and re-entrants in the unemployed population. For youth, the larger number of entrants, as well as the fact that more youth left their jobs willingly or to go to school, made them less likely to meet the EI criteria. Part-time workers were much more likely than full-time workers to be potentially eligible.
